

18 May 2018

HR Manager
DG Innovation Lab
Dhaka, Bangladesh.

Dear Sir:

I would like to apply for the post of Front-End Developer in your company.

I believe my interests and learnability make myself a good candidate for the job. Please let me explain.
Thanks for being patient.

I will drive you through some of the information about myself those are missing in the CV. It's really difficult for me to make others understand how much I love to learn new things and I really do own learnability in me. I am basically like a piece of mud; you can mold me the way you want. Gradually, I become very much comfortable with anything that I work with. Well, I don't have any direct job experience to mention, but I have learned industrial practices and how the new technologies are grabbing the market.

I do not only love to learn or code, but also I take care the things out of the box. I have a detailed knowledge of prototyping and modelling leveraging tools as well as software testing and best practices. Again, I have an intense interest for business intelligence and powerful tools used for data visualization to maintain an organization. However, I was also appreciated being in an R&D group too. I never sleep with my tasks incomplete. I do not necessarily dream to be everything or to learn everything, but I want to be a part of everything that I work for as well as participate. I want to work in such an environment where my composite skillset is justified, where I can do a lot of things. That's the bottom line.

My hobby is writing. I used to write as a freelancer for UK's global market. Currently, trying to create blogs for tech lovers. My hobby encouraged me to take elective courses like software requirement analysis and documentation, software project management and quality testing. I feel myself ready to join your company, maybe not as a pro-level developer, but on a whole. I am always ready to extend my limit beyond my official responsibilities i.e. front end only. It will also be a good start point of my career where I can sharpen my skills and contribute my best to your company.

Sincerely,

Abdullah Al Alif
Dhaka, Bangladesh.